Insecurity Leads to Competition

Air Date: January 24, 2019

Ron: In stepfamilies sometimes family members compete.

Announcer: For FamilyLife Blended®, here's Ron Deal.

Ron: Generally speaking, in a biological family when a parent gives time and care to their child they are also caring for their spouse. But in stepfamilies when time and energy is given to someone else it can feel like a threat. A stepparent may resent the time their spouse gives to the children or children may feel jealous of the time their parent gives to the stepparent.

The issue here is insecurity. So you don't feel the need to compete remind yourself that God provides us with an endless amount of love. You have more than enough love for everyone in your life and they have more than enough love for you. You don't have to feel insecure or compete. For FamilyLife Blended I'm Ron Deal.
